

ETUCE online Seminar on Long COVID-19

20 September 2022

Perspective and experiences of education trade unions in addressing the Long
Covid-19 syndrome

Two main aspects of what experience can we derive from over two-year long epidemics of COVID-19

The legal framework for trade unions in generally employee health and safety

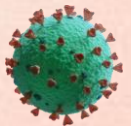

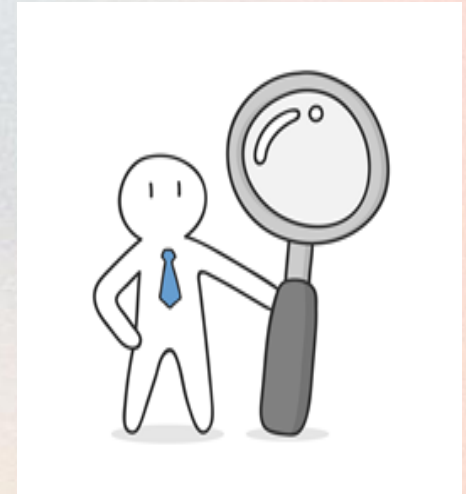

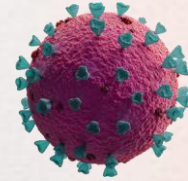

The conducted by our trade union on education staff survey on effects coronavirus on people's health

Social labour inspection

- notify the headteacher and school leaders about any violations of occupational health and safety regulations or labour law provisions,
- demand immediate removal of direct threats to the life and health school employees,
- take part in analysing the impact of spreading coronavirus on the school society,
- monitor the application of decisions and recommendations made by bodies responsible for controlling and counteracting the epidemics in the school. Notify these bodies if their decisions are not completed,
- suggest and give approval to projects which aim is improving working conditions in terms of epidemic.

Long Covid-19 syndrome

Symptoms and the course of disease of COVID-19 have changed since 2019. Fortunately, they have become weaker and most people have recovered within a few weeks.

However, no matter how serious the course was several common symptoms of post COVID-19 syndrome have been still reported.

The survey on effects of coronavirus

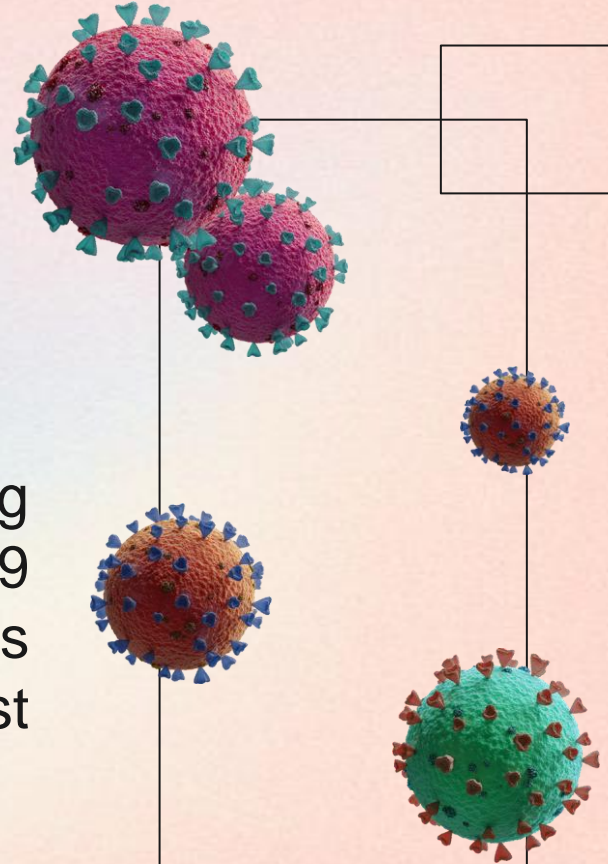

Analysis

conclusions

Our analysis clearly shows that defeating and counteracting the post-COVID19 syndrome will be a long and tedious process and the tools we should use must be in correlation with current situation.
